

They thought they were prepared.

Conquering the Unknown: Leadership Lessons from Lewis & Clark

Before the members of the Lewis & Clark Expedition set off on their epic journey, they thought they were ready. These young, fit, adventurous, outdoorsmen thought they knew about rivers. They thought they knew about mountains. They thought they knew about bears. What they discovered can be best summed up in the words of Satchel Paige- "It's not what we don't know that hurts us, it's what we know that just ain't so". Their success, their very survival, hinged on their ability to learn, unlearn and relearn.

The incredible story of the Corps of Discovery is a study of leadership in an unknown, ever-changing, new landscape.

How different is your own story? Are you prepared to lead and succeed through tough times? Do you have the right skills, the right team? Can you tell the difference between a vision and a hallucination? Come find out.

What others are saying:

"This course was excellent. Being a new leader, I was able to gather a lot of valuable information to assist with being a successful and effective leader. The instructor was great with his presentation. He helped with making the course very interactive and we never had a dull moment."

"Excellent class for 1st timers looking into moving forward in a leadership role. Instructor did a great job in demonstrating the class."

"It put what is usually a dry presentation into a fascinating story"

"Great history/leadership lesson. Incorporating both was amazing."

The Enduring Leadership Project

Leadership Always Matters